Yesterday morning residents in the neighborhood of the north end of Market Street bridge were startled with the announcement that a man had committed suicide by hanging during Sunday night, in a cooper shop near the point named. The report spread with great rapidity, and soon a crowd numbering several hundreds, gathered about the building. An examination of the premises established the truth of the report. Suspended to a rope attached to an iron bolt in a cross beam, hung the lifeless body of M. B. Howe, an employa in the shop.

The deceased was about 50 years old, and had been a resident here for a considerable period. He was rather irregular in his nabits, and we were told had been drinking to excess for two or three weeks preious to his death. It is said that he had family, but their whereabouts were unknown to those from whom we made inquiry. A son resides in Martinsburg, and was lodged before Esqr. After a free expenditure of hard words Speidel proposed that they settle their differences peaceably, and as evidence of his good faith, extended his hand to the individual with the unknown name. The latter had a large, heavy pitcher in one hand, and grasped that of Speidel with the other. No sooner had he done so, than he struck Nick on the head with the pitcher, making a frightful gash in the scalp Speidel's proffered friendship having thus been rudely met, his wrath was freshly kindled, and he proceeded to give his assailant a tremendous thrashing.
